

Ezentis to deploy fibre optics in Germany

Madrid - 24 February 2021. Grupo Ezentis, a company that deploys, operates and maintains telecommunications and energy infrastructures for large multinationals, has been awarded a contract by Fiberco, a company owned by Telefónica and Allianz, to deploy and maintain fibre optics in Germany.

The two-year contract, which is extendable, will have an estimated revenue of more than EUR 50 million and will be developed in the southern Länder of Baden-Württemberg and Bavaria.

This is a turnkey project, whereby Ezentis will be responsible for planning, network design, engineering, supervision, project control and commissioning.

This new contract reinforces Europe as Ezentis' main market in terms of sales volume, a market that accounts for 47% of the group's total business and maintains its trend of increasing its presence in Europe to 70%.

"Ezentis, working for the future"

Ezentis is a global industrial group for the deployment, operation and maintenance of telecommunications and energy network infrastructures with 60 years of experience. In recent years, it has consolidated its position as a strategic partner of reference for the deployment, operation and maintenance of infrastructures for large energy and telecommunications corporations. The Group is listed on the Madrid and Bilbao stock exchanges, with an annual turnover in excess of 400 million euros. The European market, together with Brazil, account for more than 75% of the group's revenues.
